The invitation was accepted, and Liest and Rubini entertained the audience to supper at their hotel, at a cost of twelve hundred francs. When the guests separated the hosts thought the affair had been a joke about which nothing more would be heard, but they decided to give their concert as advertised on the following night. To their astonishment the hall was packed: there was no standing room. The whole town had turned out on the chance of an invitation to supper.

formerly the custom to punish wife-beating, hen-pecking and other frailties incident to married life, by a peculiar process known as "riding the stang." It was so called because the leader was borne on a "stang," the north country word for a chair fastened on two poles. In southern England the process is called "rough music." The offender was called upon by a company of men, women and children and treated to a loud and bolsterous serenade, the instruments being cows' horns, fire shovels, tongs, frying pans, pot lids used as cymbals, tin palls, and other implements and utensils capable of producing loud and discordant noises. Along with the din the serenaders would keep up a constant hooting and yelling, and make many jeering remarks to the culprit. If one application was not sufficient, the perform ance would be repeated; sometimes, in flagrant cases, every evening for a week. This form of punishment is known to have been meted out to wife-beaters as late as 1862, and there is some ground for believing that the oustom still survives among the lower classes in some parts of England. In this country newly wedded couples are sometimes treated to a serenade somewhat resembling the above ceremony. but it is always good-natured and does not carry the idea of punishment. We call it "charly arl," pronounced "shiv-a-ree."

Elizabeth's Peril

A whoop of mingled rage, terror and pain penetrated to the upper re-gions and heralded the coming of Elizabeth's mother, for whom the sound, familiar though it was, has never been robbed of its terrors, ran out of her bedroom, and half way down the stairs to meet her waiting offspring. She sank down upon one of the steps and instantly a pair of frantic arms were locked about her knees and a Dutch cropped head and a huge pink hair ribbon were buried in her lap.

Elizabeth's mother gathered into her protecting arms the head, the pink bows and as much as possible of the plump, pathetically heaving

"What's the matter with mother" baby?" she asked tenderly. "Wow, wow!" answered Elizabeth.

Elizabeth's mother clasped her lit tle daughter closer to her. "Are you hurt, darling?" she queried, anxious-"Wow, wow, wow!" The pink bows vibrated violently, but indefinitely.

"Elizabeth, dear," said her mother trying to uncover the hidden face, you must stop crying and tell me what's the matter. Are you hurt?" The head merely burrowed deeper into the friendly lap. "It's-it's my tooth," gasped Elizabeth, finally. "Your tooth, sweetheart?" exclaimed her mother. "Does it ache?"

"No, I don't guess so." The answer came in a tone that was some between a bellow and a sniffle. "Then what's the matter?" Elli beth's mother was growing slightly peevish under the strain. "Elizabeth, you've got to stop howling and tell me." She raised the tear-stained face

"Now, tell me," she said, authoritatively. "If your tooth doesn't ache, what are you shricking about?" There was a fresh outburst of tears but with the flood came the words: "it's oh, it's coming out!"

Elizabeth's mother gave a little sigl of relief. She kissed the top of the angulahed head. "That's nothing to cry about, precious," she said, comfortingly. "You'll soon have a nice new one in its place."
"Oh, I don't mind the tooth," wall
